Catholic and Protestant Unite

DEMONSTRATE AGAINST BIGOTRY IN HARRYVILLE

Harryville has become the symbol of sectarian hatred in Northern Ireland. If it is allowed to continue it could lay the basis for conflicts which put the Drumcree events into the shade.

People going to a religious service have been spat at, assaulted and intimidated. On one occasion 2,000 bigots assembled behind Orange bands to roar, "We are the Billy boys, up to our neck in Fenian Blood": One of the organisers on that occasion was a convicted murderer Billy McCaughey.

This type of bigotry has been inspired by years of sectarian hatred which has been preached by Ian Paisley.

The demonstrations were first organised by Ian Paisley Junior who described the population of the neighbouring Catholic village of Dunloy as 'scum'. Not only have the local DUP refused to condemn the protests, but they have accepted the sectarian killer Billy McCaughey, as one of their members.

The real purpose of Harryville is to turn bitterness about poverty and unemployment in the area onto Catholic scapegoats. The bigots argue that Catholics are encroaching on 'our' areas and taking 'our jobs'.

But the real enemy of all workers, Catholic and Protestant, is a Tory government which is attacking our living standards.

It is vital that Catholics and Protestants unite to make a stand against Harryville. We should not accept that bigotry is part of 'our culture'. We should not even believe that Catholic and Protestants have such different identities that they cannot oppose right wing extremism when it stares them in the face.

United against Bigotry has called a Demonstration against Bigotry in Harryville on Saturday March 15th at 5.30 pm. We have invited trade union delegations from Ireland and Britain to attend to express their outrage at attempts to divide working people.

Buses for the demonstration Belfast: 4.20pm front of City Hall; Derry: 3.30pm Meet at Guildhall steps and cost £4. We urge you to attend.

United against Bigotry, PO Box 286, Tomb Street, Belfast

Catholic and Protestant Unite

DEMONSTRATE AGAINST BIGOTRY IN HARRYVILLE

Harryville has become the symbol of sectarian hatred in Northern Ireland. If it is allowed to continue it could lay the basis for conflicts which put the Drumcree events into the shade.

People going to a religious service have been spat at, assaulted and intimidated. On one occasion 2,000 bigots assembled behind Orange bands to roar, "We are the Billy boys, up to our neck in Fenian Blood". One of the organisers on that occasion was a convicted murderer Billy McCaughey.

This type of bigotry has been inspired by years of sectarian hatred which has been preached by Ian Paisley.

The demonstrations were first organised by Ian Paisley Junior who described the population of the neighbouring Catholic village of Dunloy as 'scum'. Not only have the local DUP refused to condemn the protests, but they have accepted the sectarian killer Billy McCaughey, as one of their members.

The real purpose of Harryville is to turn bitterness about poverty and unemployment in the area onto Catholic scapegoats. The bigots argue that Catholics are encroaching on 'our' areas and taking 'our jobs'.

But the real enemy of all workers, Catholic and Protestant, is a Tory government which is attacking our living standards.

It is vital that Catholics and Protestants unite to make a stand against Harryville. We should not accept that bigotry is part of 'our culture'. We should not even believe that Catholic and Protestants have such different identities that they cannot oppose right wing extremism when it stares them in the face.

United against Bigotry has called a Demonstration against Bigotry in Harryville on Saturday March 15th at 5.30 pm. We have invited trade union delegations from Ireland and Britain to attend to express their outrage at attempts to divide working people.

Buses for the demonstration Belfast: 4.20pm front of City Hall; Derry: 3.30pm Meet at Guildhall steps and cost £4. We urge you to attend.

United against Bigotry, PO Box 286, Tomb Street, Belfast